

Leah Fessler is an investor, journalist, and writer. Presently, she is senior manager of editorial and brand voice at Chief, the professional development network for women in the C-Suite and VP-level. Leah started her career in management at Bridgewater Associates, then spent three years working as a reporter at Quartz, covering gender, work, and relationships through a feminist lens. She's the creator of How We'll Win, Quartz's now-annual special project on the fight for gender equality at work. Leah left journalism in 2018 to pursue early-stage venture capital, working for Slow Ventures, Maveron, and Jane VC, leading diligence and narrative investment development. Leah also advises early-stage startups on growth, editorial, and management strategies, and is an investor and board observer at Ethels Club, the first social membership club for people of color in NYC.

Leah graduated summa cum laude from Middlebury College, and her work has been published in The New York Times, Quartz, Medium, The Atlantic, The Washington Post, and more. In 2018, she was honored as a LinkedIn Top Voice in Tech, and one of Folio's Top Women in Media. Leah's LinkedIn is here, Twitter is here, and personal website is here.